THE NEW YORK BLIND.

An Institution for their Education and Care Visited by the Citizen Correspondent-Though Blind They See.

Over the entrance is "The New York Institution for the Blind, founded 1831 A. D." Ringing the bell, a lady nearly blind opens a little window, saks what is wanted, upon being told she admitted us into the reception room, rang an electrie bell which was answered by a blind girl about fourteen named Winifred who walked straight ahead without any hesitancy and up the stairs without taking hold of the railing on each side, she guided us into one of the class rooms. Many of the children held their beads down as if the light burt their eyes, some of the rooms were partially darkened. To look at their eyes is a sickening sight, those whose eyes are most disfigured wear dark spectacles. Miss Riley who is totally blind conducted us around, she said "I would rather take a number through than one, I feel then that I am doing something.

We went into a number of arithmetic lasses: in one they were multiplying up to over 700 simply in their minds, when ne makes a mistake the rest raise their hands; in another room, the teacher s nice looking young man was almost totally blind; at another a boy stood outside the d.or, Miss Riley said "I guest somebody is locked out here, it don't look very well;" in another they were doing sums in interest on their slates which are wooden marked off in small squares in each of which is an open space in which are inserted lead type, the numbers up to eight being indicated by the position in which a piece of type is placed in a square, in this manner they work examples on their slates in the same way as ordinary schoolchildren putting as many pieces of type in for an example as we would numbers; they all give the answer together and one is asked to explain it; the system is very easily learned, one of the girls told ushe would give us two minutes to learn it, we told her they were more expert cholars than we.

In the machine room they were stitch ing on sewing machines with the aid of a mechanical guide to keep the work straight: here was a case of fancy work the articles were mostly knitted and crocheted and were exquisitely done Mise Riley said "we are not at the expense of gas to do our work," this work is sold ard the money put to the bank account of the poor scholars and given to them upon leaving the institution to start themselves in life as most of them are obliged to be partially or wholly selfsupporting; in this room is a wreath of hair work framed, made by a former pupil, also a wreath of head work. One isitor gave Miss Riley a pretty bouquet of flowers and she must have felt amply repaid at the gratified way in which the poor blind lady smelt of them every few

We visited one of the dormitories where the occupants made their own beds and dress themselves entirely, including combing their own bair. In another room a girl of about sixteen, was practicing on the piano, she played s piece correctly for us. In the chapel young man was playing on the organ One would not know from the conversation of the blind that their eyes are sightless for they talk about looking and eeing.

In the kindergarten the children were making geometrical figures on square flat cushions marked in squares with pins aiding themselves to make them the proper shape by small straight sticks of wood; one little boy did his work par-ticularly neatly but his next neighbor was quite the reverse, the teacher wa very patient with him, she said, "Fredlie dosen't always get it quite right; Mannie, a little colored boy explained to the class what figure they were to make and how; the children sang for us the teacher asking different ones what they would like to sing, one was "What Does Little Birdie Say?" in singing o the trees they pointed up, and of the nests they brought their hands together was well done, the neat boy had made a cylinder, a little girl had made half ar apple with the seeds in which was very good, the class of last year had made

In another work shop a blind man teaches the blind boys to cane seat chairs and they do it well, one of the rules of the institution is anything worth doing at all is worth doing well.
